WINEMAKING AT COLTERRIS

“FROM THE COLORADO LAND”

Bo Felton, Colterris Winery

A Centennial State native, Felton spent eight years at Duckhorn Vineyards, a renowned California winery—until one Blind Wine Friday gathering with friends, at which he tasted a Colterris Cabernet Franc among a lineup of California wines. It was love at first sip, and he knew it was time to come home. Bo is now head winemaker at Palisade-based Colterris, where he produces award-winning estate-grown wines. "Cabernet Franc is one of Colorado's most promising varieties," Bo says. "It ripens earlier—ideal for a shorter growing season—and intense high-altitude ultraviolet rays temper the varietal's crunchy-green-bell-pepper aroma and flavor, giving it character and finesse."

Bo Felton - Winemaker

Raised in Colorado, Bo was introduced to wine by his grandfather—an avid home winemaker. Each vintage, after his grandfather had driven a van full of grapes from California to Colorado, Bo and his family would de-stem the fruit by hand and ultimately help turn it into wine. These early experiences left Bo with a fascination for wine, and planted the seed for his future career.

Bo studied ecology, population and organism biology at the University of Colorado, Boulder. After completing his degree, he moved to California where he landed a coveted winemaking position at Duckhorn Wine Company's Goldeneye and Migration Wine division, and met his mentor Zach Rasmuson. "Zach taught me to be a steward of the vineyards and to respect the quality of the fruit in the winery." Eager to gain international experience, Bo went to New Zealand to work a harvest at Rapaura Vintners. "Bo is a true talent," says Zach. "He has vision, focus, a highly developed palate, and an innate understanding of winemaking. He also has a deep respect for his craft that is impressive for a young winemaker."

Over the next ten years, Bo became intimately familiar with site-specific wines that show their cool-climate pedigree—a familiarity that allows Bo to make balanced wines. Combining experience gained on two continents, Bo practices a vineyard-driven approach to winemaking that accentuates the character and complexity of the growing conditions and geological locations of the vineyards which he brings to Colterris.
